1/1/11, I get a call at 7:00AM from our fearless leader; he was in rough shape with the flu. He sounded like he was on death's door. The show must go on, so we ride.

The day was to be cooler than normal, so I added a scarf and rode out to meet Terry who was on his '65 pan and "Duck" at a nearby gas station on my '49 pan. Don aka "Duck", is a friend of Terry's, is an old iron butt rider who came on a modern bike.

When I got to the gas station I heard that pesky bearing sound that put me on my '35VL for the Temecula overnighter. I thought it was the generator so I had rebuilt it twice (long story). Terry heard the same noise and he felt around the cam side and narrowed the noise down to the timer. I decide I am going anyway. We mount up and headed to Corona. During the ride I figured out a plan to oil the timer with a drop from the dipstick. We got to Hunny's restaurant, our breakfast location, in plenty of time for the fix. Duck did the honors from his bike. Haven't heard the noise since. We will see in the future.

Shanon & Byron rode in from El Cajon on their '59 pan with their friends John and Christine on their modern bike. Don ride in from Victorville on his sporty but decided to head back home after breakfast.

So five bikes rode the canyons along Highway 15 toward Ellsinore. It wasn't that bad cold wise. We hit Ortega Highway, which was clear and dry with little traffic. We stopped at Hell's Kitchen, a bar half way up the highway. It was empty when we got there. Shanon commented that we had made record time. We caffeined up and kicked it there for a short time. Bryon came up with the idea to visit the famous "Capistrano Inn", a neat local bar. What the heck, we were all game. It turned out to be the "Swallows Inn", a cowboy/biker bar with lots of junk everywhere. We hung out for more rehydrating and kickin it. The ride through Capistrano was very pleasant. It was 1:30, so we started to discuss splitting up at this point, the north riders going north and the south riders going south. Duck came up with the idea of taking the back route to Cook's Corner. Everyone was up for it so off we went. It was an easy ride only about 15 miles and made it there in no time. We rehydrated, burgered up and spent more time kickin it. At this point it was decided it was time to spilt up, two bikes heading south and three heading north.

All in all in was a great day, a great ride with great people. Your mileage may vary, but it was 104 miles for me door to door.
